WEATHER KEY POINTS

04/19/22 - 04/25/22

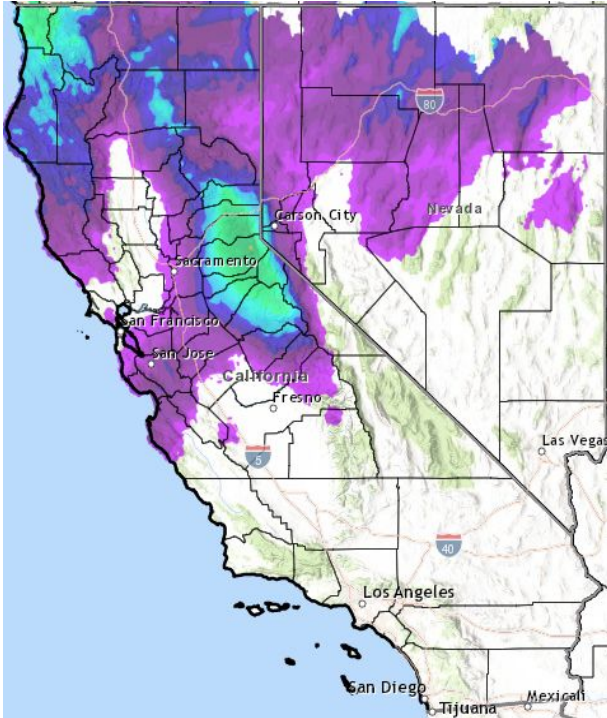

Tuesday - Monday

- Rain, mountain snow and gusty winds will continue through Tuesday
 - Precipitation will focus on northern California, with valley rain and some light to locally moderate snow possible above 3000-5000 feet
 - Gusty winds are expected across much of the state, with gusts to 50 mph in the higher terrain, along the Oregon border, and across the southern desert areas
 - Gusty Sundowner winds across Santa Barbara County are also expected
- The series of storms will continue mid-to-late week, with additional periods of precipitation expected Wednesday morning through Thursday night
 - Precipitation could be more significant and more widespread with this storm, spreading into central and potentially southern California
 - Travel impacts due to accumulating snow will once again develop above 3000-5000 feet, especially in the northern and central mountains, with multiple feet of snowfall possible in the Sierra
 - Isolated to scattered thunderstorms may be possible, especially Thursday
 - Additional gusty winds are also expected through Friday, especially in the mountains and across southern California
- Some showers will likely linger into Friday, especially in the mountains, but in general a drying trend is currently expected Friday into the weekend
